ABOUT ME

After finishing his A-Levels, I was developing Business applications for a few years. But somehow, what was missing was communication with my peers. Because of this, I left IT and studied Corporate Communication at the FHWien der WKW. After this, and a short while in the Ad Industry, I realized my goal of becoming self-employed and leading my own company.

I built websites, onlineshops and business applications – until, one day, one of my websites got hacked. What followed was a trip into the dark side of the internet. This trip has not finished yet. I learned how to hack companies – and how to defend against the hackers. I did my OSCP (Offensive Security Certified Professional) and love to convey the fascination the topic of hacking has on me in keynotes and workshops both on- and offline.

I am not a fan of the elitism present in the field. We will not manage the challenges of the future, if only a small circle understands these problems. This is evident on a smaller scale in our companies, but also on a societal level. This is reflected in all my work, be it trainings or content I produce for LinkedIn and Youtube.

I offer IT-Security-Awareness trainings at eye level. My goal is to convey the fascination of cybercrime and hacking – by allowing participants to become hackers themselves.
